Mazey outlines achievements, goals in address

By Annie Furia

Editor-in-Chief

University President Mary Ellen Mazey encouraged staff, faculty and students to work toward change at the University during her State of the University address today.

Megan Newlove, vice chair of the University's Board of Trustees, welcomed Mazey to the stage of the Donnell Theatre in the Wolfe Center.

"We're here today because we're committed to our university's mission and goals," Newlove said.

These goals were central to Mazey's speech as she praised past achievements but looked toward the future, outlining the theme of this year's address as "let's lift ourselves to yet higher levels of achievements and recognition."

Retention of last year's freshmen class is 77.5 percent, Mazey said. This is 8 percent higher than retention rates for two years ago.

New freshman enrollment is up 12 percent over last year. The goal for this year was to enroll 3200 freshmen, but 3402 freshmen arrived on campus for Opening Weekend.

The average GPA for this year's freshman class is 3.36.

"We have enrolled the most academically prepared class in the University's history," Mazey said.

The University aims to have 25,000 students total with more than 80 percent retention, Mazey said. In spring 2015, the University had 17,558 students enrolled at both the main and Firelands campuses, according to the 15th Day Headcount.

Mazey outlined a number of other goals for the University's future. These included making the University a "national model" for inclusion and diversity, decreasing the time to get a degree, lowering the cost to attend the University and balancing financial support of academics, athletics and student life programming.

A priority for the University in the past year has been scholarships, Mazey said. More than $7 million in scholarship funding was raised last year, and the goal for this year is to exceed that number.

Mazey put an emphasis on change on Philosophy is intrinsically human

Explore the possibilities

Ian Young
Guest Columnist

What images come to mind when you think of a philosopher?

Chances are, they involve an old man with a beard and a toga sitting in some ancient city, or perhaps on a mountaintop. Or maybe a young hipster guy with a quotation from Nietzsche tattooed across his chest suffering from angst in a coffee shop. The image I would like to suggest is of yourself, because I think you, and I, are philosophers. Or at least we can be if we want to be.

As I've been saying to the students in my philosophy classes these past couple of weeks, as I introduce them to the subject, being a philosopher is part of what it is to be a human being. Humans, unlike any other animals we know of, don't just unreflectively react to their environment. Rather, we wonder why things happen the way they do and are the way they are. Children seem to do this very naturally and often exasperate their parents with constant questioning and desires for ultimate answers. Unfortunately, at some point, many of us forget this part of ourselves.

This urge to understand the world we live in gave rise to the mythological explanations we find in all cultures of the world. People tend to explain things in terms of what they are familiar with. In my native country of New Zealand, its first inhabitants, the Maori, accounted for rain as the tears shed by the sky-god Rangi for his beloved wife Papatuanuku, the earth-goddess, because he had been forced apart from her by the Maori superhero Maui. Mythologies often become entwined with religious explanations, which posit powerful mysterious beings that created the universe and determine its workings, though these beings are so superior and different to us that we have little ability to understand them or their processes. Religions tend to emphasize the importance of faith, conceived as belief that is not in need of proof. Where philosophy is often said to diverge from religion and mythology is in its reliance on reasoning and evidence derived from our senses in order to reach explanations, although this evidence is always subject to questioning and doubt. It could be argued that in our rational, philosophical explanations, we are still explaining the world in terms of ideas we can understand and relate to. Philosophers reply that at least we are open to the idea of challenging and rejecting those beliefs if they are shown to lack sufficient rational backing.

One of my favorite passages in philosophy is from Plato's dialogue "Gorgias" where Socrates is taken to task by a young, bold firebrand called Callicles. Callicles says that a little philosophy is fine as part of a broad, liberal education, but that someone who carries on with it beyond adolescence is what we today might call "developmentally challenged" and deserves a whipping! I like this passage because it shows a philosopher, that is, Plato, prepared to put even his most beloved friend and teacher, Socrates, in the position of one whose chosen way of life is being questioned in the most vigorous way; philosophy unafraid to question itself!

The philosophical urge is at the heart of all education and the disciplines we see our colleges and universities divided into. The reason I ended up majoring in philosophy in my undergraduate degree was that I was interested in every subject but found that when I looked into each I started to come across questions that fall into the realm of philosophy. This even happened when I took a class in accounting! To me, philosophy was the key to all disciplines.

You may not get many chances in life to spend some time in an environment where you can engage in the process of philosophical wondering and discussion with others who are interested in doing the same. You do have that chance while you are here at university. Our philosophy department has some faculty members who rank alongside those you will find anywhere in the world. Take a class with one of them. Meet others who want to pursue this desire to do what it is that makes us distinctively human.

And in case you think taking a philosophy class isn't practical don't take my word, but listen to what Dov Seidman, founder, chairman and chief executive officer of LRN said: "Philosophy is powerful enough to tackle sprawling issues. The discipline remains amazingly practical after existing for more than 2,000 years ... The financial and climate crises, global consumption habits and other 21st-century challenges call for a "killer app." I think I've found it: philosophy."

There are some other ways to get involved in philosophy at BGSU as well. Our department supports the Philosophy Club, a group of students who meet informally on a weekly basis to discuss philosophical questions (their first meeting for the semester is Thursday September 3 at 7:30 pm in 301 Shatzel Hall, pizza and pop will be supplied). Another way is by joining the Ethics Bowl team. This is a team which debates the ethics of cases that are given to them in advance against teams from other colleges in a regional competition every Fall. We are about to start organizing this year's team, so if you are interested in finding out more about it, contact me.

Reading brings strong emotions to cast, audience

By Grant Simpson
Reporter

After a cheerful introduction from the director, the 12 performers for the Spirit of Detroit staged reading progressed solemnly towards their seats in front of the audience.

The performance began with an eruption into a cacophony of voices filled with anger, fear and love as they paint a portrait of two Detroits; one engulfed in flames and violence, and the other that is never the same afterwards. The story of two people, black and white, man and woman, reflecting upon their memories, the dead and their separation during the fighting of 1967, was created with only the power of the human voice.

The Spirit of Detroit reading was put on by the University's Department of Theatre and Film, dealing with the 1967 riot/rebellion that took place in the streets of Detroit and the unlawful shooting and killing of three young black men at the Algiers Motel during the tragedy. The staged reading was held this past Friday in the Heskett Acting Studio on the second floor of the Wolfe Center.

The project was chosen by the Elsewhere Theatre committee upon the urging of Michelle Cowin-Mensah, a Detroit-born professor, who chose the reading because of her "serious fascination with Detroit."

"I really chose it because I had never read a play before that actually talked about a ... white female's experience during the riots," says Cowin-Mensah.

The white perspective in question was Lucy Macintyre, the female protagonist of the reading, who was played by Christa Federico.

"(Cowin-Mensah) was my teacher, freshman year...and she kind of knew my style and thought this would be a really good challenge for me," Federico said about how she became involved with the group and The Spirit of Detroit.

Yet she performed marvelously in her role portraying her character, saying, "She's so strong-jawed, but she's going through so much emotional turmoil."

Combined with the "heavy, uncomfortable script," Federico admits that it was difficult to shake off after rehearsal.

Her co-actor, Quincy Thomas, gave a performance as Anthony, a black male during the riots. However, the other members of the cast also used their talent to create the immediacy and depth of the time period and situation. These talents included Terrin Bates, Mackenzie Baumhower, Jazzmine Caldwell, Charli Habingreither, Alesa McGregor, Daniel Miskell, Octavian Moldovian, A.J. Napper, Tyler Seybold and Bessie Smith.

The audience's response to the play was overwhelmingly emotional. Dealing with sensitive topics such as racism, death, cruelty and sexual assault, many times an unnerving hush fell over the crowd during pauses. Yet at other times uproarious laughter would force the performers to wait before they could be heard clearly again.

This performance achieved its purpose to create deep emotions from across the spectrum within the hearts of the viewers, as Natalie Plotner, a freshman student, said, "It was very intense ... and it touched on a lot of very sensitive subjects."

campus, both in physical and ideological ways.

"We are all agents of change," Mazey told the audience. She said the University is "willing to change to meet the future needs and demands placed on higher education."

She referenced the It's On Us and Not In Our Town campaigns and the steps taken to make the University's campus more diverse and inclusive.

For the physical changes on campus, Mazey pointed to the building of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation laboratory and the BG Flight Center, as well as the summer renovations of Olscamp Hall and classrooms in Eppler Center, the Education Building and the Business Administration Building.

In addition, Mazey said the project to renovate the University's "traditions" buildings, such as South Hall and University Hall, is "on time and on budget."

"We are transforming this campus on a continuous basis for our academic programs and our current and future students," she said. "Our campus is changing every day to meet future student needs."

Mazey took time to address the uncertain future of the University's public TV station, WBGU.

She said this year "will determine if and how we will participate in an auction designed to increase the spectrum available for wireless devices."

"We continue to review the options available to our TV station, WGBU-TV, in order to make the best decision possible for both the University and the communities we serve," she said.

Mazey also introduced and read the new University Creed, created by members of Undergraduate Student Government. The creed "captures the spirit of Bowling Green State University and why we all believe in our great university," she said.

"We were so excited and grateful for her to make the announcement," Danielle Parker, vice president of USG, said. "It's really rewarding to see the University embrace it."

Parker said the creed was introduced at Resident Advisor training and has become a part of USG meetings, but this was the first major event at which the creed had been said.

"We're so fortunate for (Mazey's) support," she said.

Newlove returned to the stage to close out the speech, telling the audience, "This university is a special place because of your dedication."

Men's soccer goes undefeated in opening weekend, scores 7 goals

By Aaron Parker
Sports Editor

The Bowling Green men's soccer team went 2-0 to begin the season this past weekend with wins over Southern Illinois University Edwardsville and Western Illinois.

The first game against SIUE was a 3-1 win, with the Falcons taking control of the game midway through the first half.

The three goals scored came from Ryan James, Joe Sullivan and Hermann Trophy watch list nominee Pat Flynn.

Flynn looked to put his team ahead after James scored the opening goal and put a header past the SIUE goalie, but the goal was taken back on an offside call.

Flynn came back seconds later to score and put the Falcons up 2-0. He then assisted 17 seconds later to Sullivan who put the Falcons up by three. All the goals came in a span of just over four minutes.

"It's a confidence booster when you see the ball go through the net. It was unfortunate on the call but seeing the ball go through, you prove to yourself that you can score there," Flynn said. "We really got on top of them in that five minute stretch."

While that span was an obvious standout for the game, head coach Eric Nichols thinks there is still things the unit can improve on.

"It was a great five minutes. We try to be pretty quick with our attack anyway and create chances fast," head coach Eric Nichols said. "But we didn't have enough of those moments. There were too many gaps outside of that five minutes that we're definitely going to have to get better at."

While it was the upperclassmen who scored the goals, it was red-shirt freshman Bismark Agyeman that answered unknown questions for the team.

Agyeman did not play in a single match last fall. The second year player assisted on two of the goals scored to teammates James and

"We've been really excited about Bismark.

"It was a good weekend. We came in and got two wins, that's what we really wanted to do."

That second assist was just brilliant" Nichols said. "Those are things that we've seen him do consistently and we know he can do it."

In the last game of the weekend against Western Illinois, it was Flynn who took the attention of the crowd in the 4-1 win. Flynn got his first hat trick of the season in the game, including one goal from an unlikely angle.

Red-shirt junior Ryan Heuton had four saves in the contest, totaling five in two starts on the weekend.

"It was a good weekend. We came in and got two wins, that's what we really wanted to do," Heuton said. "I thought we played well in both games, there were times we could have been better, but we got the wins and we're going to take it into Thursday."

The Falcons will continue their action at home this Thursday against Drexel at 7 p.m.

Women's Soccer suffers first loss of the season

By Evan Hayes
Reporter

The Bowling Green Women's Soccer team was handed its first loss of the season this past Friday at Morehead State, dropping the contest in overtime 2-1. The loss drops the Falcons to 2-1 on the season after a quick 2-0 start.

"This is a great learning moment for our team as we will gain experience on how to manage a game through the highs and lows," head coach Lindsay Basalyga said.

Both teams played strong on the defensive end during the first half, holding each other scoreless despite an onslaught of shots on both sides.

Bowling Green took eight, while Morehead took seven in the half. Redshirt freshman Erica Hubert led the team with three in the half, and team captain, Hayley Parkinson, recorded two shots.

BG goalie Lauren Cadel recorded three saves in the period, the most shots she's faced in a half all season.

The Falcon's major opportunity came during the 21st minute, when sophomore Mikaela Couch's attempt missed off the crossbar and Alexa Cheripko's follow up attempt was saved by the Eagle's keeper Kaitlyn Murphy.

The Eagles offensive attack in the first half was highlighted by two corner kicks, but they failed to convert on their chances, missing wide on the first and high on the second.

The second half started off in the same fashion, as both teams went scoreless for the first fifteen minutes.

Morehead struck first when forward Dani Wilson scored on a penalty kick in the 61st minute.

The Falcons evened the score four minutes later when sophomore, Leah Runkle, scored on a putback of Morgan Abbitt's missed shot on goal. It was Runkle's first goal of the season.

Both teams then went scoreless the rest of the half.

The Eagles came storming out on offense in overtime, taking three shots and two corner kicks. Runkle answered back with her own attempt in the 97th minute, though it missed wide.

The winning goal was scored by Morehead's Wilson in the 99th minute of the match.

Despite the loss, the Falcons are optimistic for the season still, taking the loss as an opportunity to learn and move forward.

"We are definitely taking away some experience and some learning. We know what it feels like to lose and we don't like it. We are going to do everything we can to learn from this, get better and come back stronger than ever," Cheripko said. "In practice we can work on different things and watch video to get better."

The team is in action again this Wednesday in Detroit at Detroit University at 3 p.m.

Sophomore Forward Mikaela Couch attacks in a regular season game last season. Couch has three shot attempts so far this year, two of them were on goal.

The future is up in the air for racer Sam Hornish Jr.

Sam Hornish Jr. is one of the greatest race car drivers to come out of the state of Ohio.

However, with uncertain plans next season, will his partnership with Richard Petty Motorsports come to an end?

Although Richard Petty Motorsports hasn't stated when his contract is up, it appears, at the moment, to be through the end of 2015 only.

A number of drivers, including highly sought-after free agent Clint Bowyer, have been rumored to replace Hornish in the No. 9 Ford starting next season. If Bowyer is unavailable, the team may also take a chance on Chris Buescher, who currently leads the

Zane Miller
Reporter

Xfinity Series point standings.

As for the Irwin Tools Night Race, Hornish is 26th in the NASCAR Sprint Cup Series points (adjusted for the current Chase for the Sprint Cup grid) having three top ten's to Bowyer's two top five's, ten top ten's and 16th place points spot within the Chase grid.

Buescher also has two wins, ten top five's, and 13 top ten's. RPM would be hard-pressed to pass up Bowyer, as he also brings over full-time sponsorship in addition to his superior statistics.

With this data in mind, as much as I like Hornish (he is personally my favorite driver), I expect RPM to go in a different direction next season unless the other candidates can't be brought in.

He could potentially change his fortunes by getting into the Chase this year, but time is running out as he would need to win in one of the next two remaining regular season races to make it in.

So, if Hornish were to leave RPM at the end of the season, he potentially could retire from racing if no other high-quality opportunities were to come along. After all, he already has three IndyCar Series titles, an Indianapolis 500 victory, and a 15 year auto racing career.

He has certainly proven himself to the racing world, and an end after this season wouldn't tarnish anything.

With that said, I don't think he will retire. He's still a very experienced driver with a lot of talent, and has shown in years past at the Xfinity level he can get the job done in a stock car.

I think that at the very least, he'll have a part-time ride like he had with Joe Gibbs Racing in 2014.

Recognized state-wide, the University's It's On Us campaign showed videos about recognizing sexual assault at it's first meeting for the academic year Thursday, August 27.

It's On Us debuts video promoting campaign

By Audra Delaney
Reporter

It's On Us, a federal campaign that came to Bowling Green in 2014, had its kick off event Thursday in the Student Union.

Thursday evening, the coordinators of It's On Us held an event which included buttons, bracelets, pens and free t-shirts, all of which attempted to spread one singular message: It's on us to stop sexual assault.

Over the last year, the campaign has slowly grown in popularity and awareness across campus. Throughout the 2014-2015 academic year, a contest was held to see who could create a video that could best relay the message of It's On Us. The goal of these videos was to spread information on the topics of recognizing sexual assault, identifying situations in which it may happen, innerving in situations where consent has not or cannot be given and creating an environment in which sexual assault is unacceptable and survivors are supported. Thursday night's event showcased the winning video, after showing three other videos about the campaign.

The first video included student, faculty, coaches and President Mary Ellen Mazey. Next on the screen were members of the Men's and Women's basketball teams supporting the cause. Following those, a student-made video was shown about helping someone when they cannot give consent to what is going to happen. Finally, the winning video was shown and took a unique approach, as it showed students having conversations about the issue of sexual assault with someone they had never met.

"1 in 5 women and 1 in 16 men are sexually assaulted. I myself am a victim of sexual assault, and that is why I am very gung ho about this issue." said Mary Toth, senior committee member.

Aside from the videos, organizations such as athletic teams, fraternities and sororities have been involved in making this campaign thrive.

The work put in over the last year resulted in Bowling Green State University's It's On Us campaign to become the model for campaigns around the state through the Ohio Sexual Violence Organization. This coming year, the organization hopes to reach more individuals and educate them through workshops and events. Events are in the works for residence halls across campus, as well as for the Resident Advisors and for students that take part in fraternities and sororities.

Faith Yingling, Director of Wellness Affairs summed it up by saying, "We care about issues like this at Bowling Green. Anyone can be sexually assaulted and anyone can sexually assault. It was great to see both females and males here at the meeting tonight, because this organization and issue involves everyone."

Students and faculty attended the meeting on Thursday evening from all across campus, including sports teams, the athletic department, residence halls and the communication department. When asked what she thought of the program, freshman Jackalyn Siebenaler said, "I feel like It's On Us is a good cause that addresses issues that are not talked about a lot. That needs to change."

Relay for Life runs into location problems

By Holly Shively
City Editor

With their normal location of the Perry Field House set to undergo renovations, Colleges Against Cancer has had difficulties finding a suitable replacement for Relay for Life of BGSU.

The organization has recently requested to use the Student Recreation Center to host the event, but they were denied the facility.

Jayna Clemens, president of Colleges Against Cancer, requested to use the indoor track along with the courts below for the event, which was estimated to have 400-500 participants. In the email, Clemens shared that the event would need a stage, speakers, and about 50 tables.

In an emailed response, David Hollinger of the SRC said, "given the physical impact such an event would have on the newly renovated facility as well as the disruption of services/programs that we provide to our students/members, we feel the SRC is not an appropriate venue for your event." Hollinger then suggested possible alternative locations the organization could try contacting.

Clemens main concern about not being able to utilize the SRC was if they would get the same response from the PFH after the renovation. Clemens asked, "Where does that leave student orgs to have events?"

"We're terrified of fees," Clemens said. She said that the organization does all the cleaning on its own and would take great effort to not cause any messes or damages to the SRC. She went on to say, "I like to think we leave it cleaner than when we started."

Clemens and the other members of Colleges Against Cancer found a back-up location in the turf room at the Perry Field House. Using the turf room at the Field House leads to more inconveniences for the organization.

The previously set date has been changed in order for the group to be able to utilize the turf room. The new date for the event is November 6-7.

Besides the date change, having food in the turf room has lead to inconveniences. Since teams receive donations for food products to raise money for Relay for Life, tarps will need to be placed under the tables to prevent food from landing on the turf. The organization will also have to create its own track in the turf room.

About the PFH, Clemens said, "They're making a lot of accommodations for us to be able to use their facility, and we are very appreciative of that."

Assistant VP of Student Affairs and Director of Recreation and Wellness Stephen Kampf said that Recreation and Wellness overseas the PFH as well. He said the track room at the Field House will be closed from around October 15 to December 1. "Because we won't have any basketball courts over there, the basketball courts here [SRC] become the primary location for any type of basketball activity. So, if we bring in an activity like Relay for Life, we have to shut down all the courts, which is going to make a lot of other students unhappy," Kampf said. He said between 800 and 1200 students use the SRC each weekend.

Kampf was also concerned about getting equipment into and out of the rec center. He said that after Dance Marathon used the Field House during the SRC's renovation, they realized how much easier it is to hold large events in the Field House.

"Each event has different types of worries," Kampf said. One of the main worries was the stage that Relay for Life of BGSU would need. In the past, events needing a stage at the SRC had less worry because the floors were a multipurpose synthetic rubber, but the newly renovated facility has hardwood floors. "When you put hardwood down, anything that has a sharp edge to it that might go into the ground is going to do damage."

Kampf isn't worried about Relay for Life not being able to utilize the Field House after renovation. "There's typically a synthetic rubber floor at the end of the Field House," Kampf said.
